It was after Glynn passed away. I looked across the street and Bertha was on her roof. It scared me. I ran over there. She was fixing something. She laughed when I tried to get her to trade places with me. I stayed until she finished and came down. She was very independent.

I have so many memories, but I will just share one more. Bertha was my historian. Anything I needed to know, I asked, she knew. She enjoyed it. I asked things like, "did Lincoln have a stop light", "when was my house built", and many other things.

Bertha was a remarkable lady, and she and Glynn were pillars of our small community for many years.
