“ My Aunt Joyce was such a phenomenal example of human strength. She wasnt able to lift a car with her bare hands, nor was she able to break bricks with the swing of a fist. But even though there was so much pain and suffering that my Aunt went through, she never used her life as a crutch. She always possessed the strength to push through everything she faced; even when she didnt feel like going through with it. This loss for me is incredibly bittersweet. For months, my family and I (especially my mother) had to watch my Aunt Joyce as she battled as hard as she could. But even though she is not here on this earth anymore, I know for a fact shes with Jesus, and my grandfather, who is probably still winning Monopoly (granted thats hes the banker). Her earthly life has ended, but so has her suffering. And theres nothing more I could say than Thank you Jesus for being as merciful and as loving as you are; even when there is nothing about it we could possibly comprehend. Selfishly, I wish I could see her one last time just so I could hear one more Godfather-esque Aye, mah boy!. I know Ill hear it again one day. But for now, thank you Jesus for saving my Aunt, and thank you Aunt Joyce for being the strong, loving, care-free person you were. I will do my best to carry that on.
