“ From what I've read, today is my brother's memorial yet I see I'm a first to post a memory?

I have so many very fond memories of my baby brother, especially the month he stayed with me in Los Angeles when he was 14.

During that time we visited, among so many other places, a store called The Soldier Factory, in Cambria, California, long since gone.

But this store sold pewter miniatures and I bought Matt his first hand painted pewter miniature: Galadriel of LotR's. He loved it! What a surprise to learn years later, he partnered in a business dedicated to pewter gaming miniatures. I'd like to believe he thought of that over the years

To his daughters, I had always hoped once they reached age 18, they would hopefully reach out to get to know Aunt Linda. I'm still hopeful though they are well into their 30's now...or so? Sadly, I don't even know...just doing some simple math.

I also hope my nieces are happy young women enjoying their lives. I would love to hear from any!

Kaitybug, I've held you in my arms...Hannah and Morgan I've only met twice if I recall, last when Morgan was about six months old. It's all very sad and very unnecessary. I always believed family was important!!!

RIP Matt. I will always miss my little brother. There was a time when we were very close and that is something I have missed for decades now.

I will contact this funeral home and ask to leave my info if any of my nieces will please let me hear from you. It's past time!

Lo! This is halarious. What a different tone from the absolutely horrendous text you sent him right before he past. While I'm sure you don't remember you did meet me as an adult. When you came to Texas to use my father. The time he gave you a home, put brand new tires on your car, and gave you 500$ in which you spent on cigarettes and booze. The people who loved him and were important in his life were at his funeral and spent an hour just talking about memories and loving him. Nice try getting people to feel sorry for you by writing a completely different narrative then what is true. This daughter, and I'm positive the other two daughters, have no interest in being used and taken advantage of. After what you sent my father, you have no right to even speak to us. Don't bother replying as I will not be back on here to see more lies.
